Ole-Eirik Lerøy
Chairman of the Board
Marine Harvest

Regin Jacobsen
CEO
Bakkafrost

Jon Hindar
CEO
Cermaq Group

The salmon story has been one of the great successes of modern agriculture, and a sign of the promise the aquaculture sector holds. But the rate of growth over the past 30 years has slowed, and geographical expansion is limited, as is supply. While this can be a boost to bottom lines as prices rise, long-term, where will the industry find growth?

PANEL: REDUCING RISK WITH INNOVATION

John Marshall
Technical Director
Benchmark Animal Health

Ronald L. Stotish
CEO
AquaBounty Technologies

Daniel Fairweather
Director of Aquaculture &
Fisheries, Willis Limited

The aquaculture sector is moving fast - and no industry can expand quickly without experiencing growing pains. For the fish farming sector, those pains are presenting themselves as a string of diseases and parasites that aren't just an annoyance - they can devastate a sector. Fortunately, health, genetic and fish farming improvements are taking huge strides at finding ways to protect fish farmers' valuable investments. In addition, an emerging set of technologies is opening the door for new kinds of farming that can be more efficient, more environmentally friendly, and eventually, highly profitable.
